Interesting or significant material: 106–112 is majuscule undertext, apostolos, from 7th century. This forms its own quire, and the leaves are generally darker than the rest of the MS. Also, the rubrication is more visible than the brown lettering, in keeping with the principle that majuscule rubrication endured better than minuscule rubrication. This has been detected in other MSS (e.g., the uncial of Mark in Constantinople). For some reason, the composition of the red lettering in later centuries seems to have become both different and inferior to that in earlier centuries.
